ABSTRACT

This bibliography addresses the subject of population education. Entries are categorized into three parts. Part 1, "Population Education," consists of titles of books and other documents addressing various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second section. Part 2, "Knowledge Base Information," consists of titles on the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics: (1) Documentation; (2) Education (including environmental education, functional literacy, family planning, AIDS, and sexuality); (3) Environment; (4) Fertility and Family Planning; (5) Health and Nutrition; (6) Information and Communication; (7) Migration, Urbanization, and Human Settlement; (8) Population Policy and Trends; (9) Research and Evaluation; (10) Socio-economic Factors and Conditions; and (11) Women. Part 3, "Audiovisual Materials," consist of titles of various kinds of audiovisual aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) having to do with knowledge base and aspects of population education. Appendices contain a list of publishers and sources as well as indexes. Each entry or title is given a running number and bibliographical references that include either the author or corporate author, title, imprint, collation, subject key words, country key words, and classification number. A source code is also given. (PVD)

INTRODUCTION

This issue of the Population Education Accessions List is an output from our computerized bibliographic data base using the Micro CDS/ISIS system. Beginning with 1996, the Accessions List is being generated from this computerized bibliographic data base three times a year. Starting with this issue, the Accessions List is also produced and distributed in three formats: printed format, diskette format, and via e-mail.

The list categorizes the entries into three parts:

Part I - Population Education consists of titles dealing with various aspects of population education arranged by country in the first section and general materials in the second section.

Part II - Knowledge Base Information consists of titles that deal with the different multidisciplinary aspects of population education. These entries are grouped into sections of the following major multidisciplinary topics:

1. Documentation
2. Education (including environmental, functional literacy, family planning, AIDS, and sexuality)
3. Environment
4. Fertility and family planning
5. Health and nutrition
6. Information and communication
7. Migration, urbanization, and human settlement
8. Population policy and trends
9. Research and evaluation
10. Socio-economic factors and conditions
11. Women

Part III - Audio-visual materials consist of titles of various kinds of audio-visual aids (films, slides, charts, kits, videotapes, etc.) dealing with both knowledge base and population education aspects.

Part IV - Appendices consist of List of Publishers and Sources, Subject Index, Author Index, and Geographical Index.

Each entry or title is given a running number and bibliographical references that include: (i) either the author or corporate author, (ii) title; (iii) imprint; (iv) collation; (v) subject key words; (vi) country key words; and (vii) classification number. In addition to these, a source code is also given. The source code is an abbreviation of the name of the organization where a particular title can be acquired. For the complete names and addresses of the given source codes, kindly consult the List of Publishers and Sources given in the Appendices.

Who enrolls in Head Start?: a demographic analysis of Head Start-Eligible children. Ann Arbor, MI, Population Studies Center, 1994. 268 p. (PSC reprint series no. 475)
Reprinted from Early Childhood Research Quarterly 9 (1994): 243-68.

This article describes those who were and were not served by Head Start in 1990. Firstly, it examined how characteristics of the child, family, and community were associated with the enrolment of poor 3- to 5-year old children in Head Start. Secondly, it identified the types of programs and child-care arrangements in which non-Head Start children were enrolled in 1990. Third, it focused on how family and community characteristics are related to Head Start-eligible parents' use of multiple arrangements. Finally, it explored the types of supplementary and wraparound arrangements Head Start and non-Head Start children use.

Evaluation of total literacy campaigns: Chittoor and Nizamabad districts of Andhra Pradesh. Hyderabad, India, Booklinks Corporation, 1995. 196 p.

The present study covers the Total Literacy Campaigns organized in two districts of Andhra Pradesh - Chittoor and Nizamabad. Both these districts have been examples of successful implementation of Total Literacy Campaign having achieved significant results. This has largely been due to the very able guidance of the concerned District Collectors, the close involvement of the district machinery as well as the commitment of a large number of youth as well as teachers.

Women's credit programs and family planning in rural Bangladesh. International Family Planning Perspectives, Vol. 22, No. 4, Dec. 1996. p. 158-162.

In many developing countries, programmes offering collateral-free credit have integrated economic improvements with consciousness-raising, family planning information and motivation, preventive health services and other activities that promote social welfare. A 1995 household survey of programme areas of 5 non-governmental organizations in rural Bangladesh that offer such credit programmes reveals that women who participate in them are more likely to use contraceptives, to want no additional children and to desire smaller families than women who do not participate. Increased empowerment was associated with the desire for no more children among credit members. Non-members living in programme areas also desired smaller families, suggesting a diffusion of norms established by credit members to other women in the community.

Assessing the impact of training on staff performance. Family Planning Manager, Vol. 5, no. 3, Fall 1996. 26 p.

This issue introduces Training Impact Evaluation (TIE), a process designed to help managers identify and strengthen links between training and staff performance. It describes benefits of conducting a Training Impact Evaluation using a team approach and step by step through TIE process. It also offers practical suggestions for collecting, analyzing, and interpreting data on trainee performance in workplan. It concludes with suggestions for ways that managers can use information to make recommendations to decision makers, to improve training courses, or to seek management solutions to performance problems.

Family planning choice behaviour in urban slums of Bangladesh: an econometric approach. Asia-Pacific Population Journal, Vol. 12, No. 1, Mar. 1997. p. 17-32.

This article is aimed at focusing on the intensity of family planning practices in the urban slums of Bangladesh. The choice behaviour of slum dwellers for family planning has been analyzed in the framework of an appropriate econometric model. Some policy implications emerging from the study are also provided. One important policy implication of the study is that programmatic efforts should be enhanced and strengthened for accelerating family planning practices to arrest the unbridled population growth in Bangladesh's urban slums.

This article assesses levels and trends in fertility in Nepal between 1977 and 1995. The data are from two national surveys conducted in 1991 and 1996. Fertility level and trends are estimated by using the "birth history" method and the "own-children" method. The results show a steady decline in fertility over the estimation period.

In their own words: a qualitative study of family planning in Jordan. Baltimore, Johns Hopkins School of Public Health, 1996. 44 p. (IEC field report no. 6)

This report presents findings from qualitative research and relies predominantly on words of married women and men aged 15 to 49 residing in the Central, Northern, or Southern regions of Jordan. It focuses on beliefs and attitudes underlying Jordanians' contraceptive behaviours and aspirations for their families. Each of 24 discussion groups involved 8 to 10 respondents are encouraged to speak in their own words (quotations from respondents in English as well as in original Arabic are presented in the report) about their marital expectations, their concerns regarding children, their beliefs about family size, and their experiences with family planning and various contraceptive methods.

Quality of care in family planning service delivery in Kenya: clients' and providers' perspectives; final report. New York, Population Council, 1995. 16 p.

This study defines clients' and providers' dimensions of quality of care and compare them with elements contained in the Bruce-Jain framework. The study takes place in two sites of urban Nairobi and two in rural Murang'a district. Nine service delivery points (SDPs) within the four locations are selected for the study. Using a combination of focus group discussions and in-depth interviews, researchers collected qualitative data from four groups of women: current users of family planning services, women who switched clinics, women who discontinued use of services, and women who had never used services.

Impact of a mass media vasectomy promotion campaign in Brazil. International Family Planning Perspectives, Vol. 22, No. 4, 1996. p. 169-175.

A mass media campaign to promote vasectomy in three Brazilian cities Sao Paulo, Fortaleza and Salvador consisted of prime-time television and radio spots, the distribution of flyers, an electronic billboard and public relations activities. Clinic data indicate that the monthly mean number of vasectomies initially increased during the six-week campaign by 108 per cent in Fortaleza, by 59 per cent in Salvador and by 82 per cent in Sao Paulo. An in-depth analysis of the Sao Paulo clinic data indicates that during the campaign, television replaced personal sources as the dominant source of referrals among men who made telephone inquiries to the clinics. A regression analysis based on Sao Paulo clinic records for 12 years confirmed that periodic mass media promotions helped alleviate but did not halt the general downward trend in clinic volume over time. Increases in the cost of vasectomy and in alternative sources for the operation contributed to the lower volume.

Culture and the fertility transition: thoughts on theories of fertility decline. Honolulu, Hawaii, East-West Center, 1992. 14 p. (Report series, no. 295)

There are variety of theories or explanations about why fertility has declined, and it continues to argue about what "really" drives the fertility transition. There are basically three points of discussion in this paper. The first is trying to answer - why fertility declines. The second point is the types of ideational processes that enter into fertility decision-making. Finally, the third point is the evidence used to argue for particular explanations of the fertility decline is open to alternative interpretation.

Planning for sustainability: assessing the management capabilities of your organization. Family Planning Manager, Vol. 5, No. 4, Winter 1996/97. 20 p. Accompany with Case Scenario: Dostluk Health Services Assesses its Management Capabilities; Supplement 1: Pocket Guide to MDA Indicators; Supplement 2: The MDA Start-up Kit.

This issue explains how organizations move through stages of development as they build their management capabilities, and presents the management development assessment (MDA) methodology, a systematic process for rapidly assessing the management capabilities of your own organization. Two supplements accompany this issue. The Pocket Guide to MDA Indicators provides sample management indicators to help you set measurable indicators for assessing organizational capabilities. The MDA Start-up Kit provides instructions on developing and administering an MDA questionnaire to collect information on management capabilities and includes a full sample questionnaire. The issue concludes by explaining how to analyze the results of your assessment and develop and implement MDA action plan.

The Uganda Family Planning Promotion Project and the Delivery for Improved Services for Health Project.

This report presents findings of the Uganda Family Planning Promotion Project (UFPPP) evaluation, as well as baseline information on the Delivery for Improved Services for Health Project (DISH). Chapter 1 gives information on UFPPP and DISH project. Chapter 2 details technical methods used to evaluate the findings including design of household and clinic studies. It discusses the sampling strategies, data collection and analysis. Chapter 3 presents demographic characteristics of follow-up household survey respondents. Chapter 4 presents their fertility awareness, attitudes, and behaviour. Chapter 5 presents data on HIV/AIDS, STDs, information collected as part of DISH project baseline. Chapter 6 discusses other reproductive health issues addressed in questionnaire, including breastfeeding and abortion. Chapter 7 examines the impact of UFPPP. Chapter 8 presents conclusions of evaluation and recommendation for future IEC interventions. A detailed list of IEC interventions and findings of multivariate analysis are found in appendixes.

Levels and trends of contraceptive use as assessed in 1994. New York, United Nations, 1996. 163 p. (ST/ESA/SER.A/146)

The present report contains a comprehensive review of sample survey data on the level of contraceptive use, types of methods employed and recent trends in contraceptive practice throughout the world. It discusses the availability of contraceptives to national populations. The amount of growth in contraceptive practice that will be needed in developing countries if fertility is to decline in accordance with United Nations population projections is discussed. A reference table shows national survey measures of current contraceptive use, by method, for all available countries and dates. Data available through July 1994 are included in the review. Two new features in this edition are a review of current contraceptive use according to women's national status.

Is reproductive health a sustainable rural development strategy?: an analysis of a family planning project in Nepal; case study. Oklahoma City, World Neighbors, [1995]. 19 p.

The Baudha-Bahunipati Project is a programme of the Family Planning Association of Nepal, supported by World Neighbors. It explores the means by which family planning can at least approach the ideal of sustainability. The analysis of this project shows that reliance on outside resources can be minimized by training local volunteers and by integrating reproductive health with such sustainable activities as growing fodder, raising livestock and improving drinking water supply.

Population, food, and nutrition. Population Bulletin, Vol. 51, No. 4, Feb. 1997. 48 p.

This Population Bulletin explores factors that determine both demand for and supply of food worldwide. The demand is determined primarily by number of people, but it also affected by lifestyle and type of diet people adopt, and by the amount of food that is spoiled or wasted in food distribution and marketing systems. The authors explore ways to increase yields which vary from genetic manipulation of plants to ensuring credit for farmers and discuss constraints on agricultural production, such as erosion and salinization of the soil. The authors also discuss vital role of agricultural research and government policies in ensuring food security for the world.

Handbook of interpersonal communication. 2nd ed. Thousand Oaks, Calif., Sage Publications, 1994. 824 p.

The handbook is divided into four parts. Part I lays out the key theoretical and methodological issues and the second part focuses on component parts or growth processes, verbal and nonverbal behaviour, situational and cultural influences, and the characteristics each communicator brings to an encounter. Part III examines mutual influence and temporal processes and asks the question: What is interpersonal competence? This part also looks at several functions of interpersonal processes such as social support, affect, influence, and power. The last section examines interpersonal processes in four important and familiar relational contexts: coworkers, physician/patient, families, and other personal/social relationships.

Report on population characteristics: the 1995-1996 survey of population change. Bangkok, 1996. 206 p. In Thai and English.

The 1995-1996 Survey of Population Change was undertaken in order to provide the data on changes in demographic characteristics during the intercensal period. The Survey of Population Change is the multi round survey for the period of one year. There are five rounds with the interval of about 3 months in each round. The main characteristics of base population was collected in the first round. The successive round of the survey are conducted by recording the events of births, deaths, migration and other changes occurring during each round. This report presents the results from the first round of the survey about the demographic and socio-economic characteristics of population during the intercensal period.

This pocket edition of ICPD Programme of Action is issued by the United Nations Population Fund on the occasion of the second anniversary of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). The Conference, held in Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, was convened under the auspices of the United Nations. Under the overall theme of "population, sustained economic growth and sustainable development", the conference conducted a general debate on population and related issues and their implications for social and economic development before it adopted, by consensus, a new Programme of Action that will guide national and international action in the area of population and development during the next 20 years. This publication contains the Programme of Action of the Conference as well as the oral and written statements and reservations on the Programme of Action.

India's population in transition. Washington, D.C., Population Reference Bureau, 1995. 51 p. (Population bulletin, Vol. 50, no. 3, October 1995)

This report examines India's demographic transition to lower fertility and mortality, and how these changes affect population of a country that adds 17 million people to the world every year. It emphasizes on factors responsible for fertility decline and considers signs that demographic transition is gaining momentum in India. The report looks at the considerable fertility and mortality differences among states, religious and ethnic groups and between city and countryside, for clues about future trends.

A new look at poverty in America. Population Bulletin (PRB) Vol. 51, No. 2, September 1996. 48 p.

This bulletin examines the trends in the number and characteristics of the poor, and looks at some of the common misperceptions about poverty. The report discusses the great diversity and dynamic nature of the poverty population, and the enormous differences in economic well-being among population groups and geographic areas. It shows how demographic change, along with social and economic change, has contributed to the increase in poverty over the past 20 years, and speculates about future trends. The major welfare programs used by poor and low income Americans, the fundamental changes in government welfare programs enacted in the mid 1990s are reviewed.

Women, work, and family in America. Population Bulletin, Vol. 51, No. 3, Dec. 1996. 48 p.

The lives of American women have been transformed by new patterns of marriage and childbearing, educational attainment, and labour force participation. These changes will shape the American family and society of the 21st century. The authors discuss major theories that explain why women have different patters of labour force participation than men, and how women reconcile glaring inequities in domestic responsibilities and earnings levels. The authors also compare family and labour force patterns of American women with those in other developed countries.

Learning from Islam: advocacy of reproductive rights in Indonesian Pesantren. Reproductive Health Matters, No. 8, Nov. 1996. p. 86-96.

This paper focuses on innovative approach of Indonesian Society for Pesantren and Community Development to understand women's rights in relation to reproductive and sexual health in Indonesian socio-cultural context, by studying and reinterpreting sacred texts of Islam. It describes how the group links issues of social justice, gender and reproductive health within Islamic jurisprudence and runs workshops for women who are active in Islamic boarding schools in rural Java and Madura, including pregnancy and childbearing, maternal mortality, clandestine abortion, sexual relations and HIV/AIDS.

Women's lives in transition: a qualitative analysis of the fertility decline in Bangladesh. Studies in family planning, Vol. 27, No. 5, Sep.-Oct. 1996. p. 251-268.

In this qualitative analysis of 21 focus-group sessions with rural women ranging in age from the teens to late 40s and living in the village of Matlab area, the women's perceptions of their changing society and influence of family planning programme are examined. The women's statements reveal their awareness of social and economic transition they are undergoing and their interest in family size limitation, which is bolstered by a strong family planning programme. Although the shifts in economic and social circumstances are not large, in conjunction with strong family planning programme they constitute a powerful force for change in attitudes, ideas, and behaviour among these women.

Early marriage among women in developing countries. International Family Planning Perspectives, Vol. 22, No. 4, Dec. 1996. p. 148-157, 175.

A study using data from 40 Demographic and Health Surveys shows that substantial proportion of women in developing countries continue to marry as adolescents. Education and age at first marriage are strongly associated both at individual level and at society level: A woman who has attended secondary school is considerably less likely to marry during adolescence, and in countries with a higher proportion of women with a secondary education, the proportion of women who marry as adolescents is lower.

The rain drop: JOICFP & assisting family planning center for the Vietnam rural areas (video tape). Tokyo, JOICFP, 1995? 1 reel, 11.35 mins., sd., col. English.
VHS/PAL system.

This colourful animated film shows the life of two girls who were born on the same day. One has a boyfriend after finalizing the lower secondary school and no longer goes to school at the age of 16. Later, she becomes a poor mother of six children and suffers from diseases which are often found in women who get married early and bad family planning. All of her children have malnutrition and different diseases. While another girl continues her study and becomes a doctor of medicine. The video tries to explain the concept of living through these two girls' life. The girls are not a drop of rain. Not to lose our youth and happiness. We should have a happy family in which all members are healthy and educated and be able to serve ourselves and society. Happiness is in our hands.
